Introducing the Pare Blog

Pare was pleased to roll-out an updated, mobile-friendly company website earlier this year. Now we are thrilled to launch our new company blog! With articles ranging over a wide landscape—from sustainability topics like the "tiny house movement" and "upcycling" of bourbon barrels, to topics of interest from the work and personal lives of our diverse staff—we believe you will find the Pare Blog surprising, educational and informative. Visit the Pare Blog here and become a follower!

RISEP 25th Anniversary

On November 20th, the Rhode Island Society of Environmental Professionals (RISEP) celebrated its 25th anniversary. George Palmisciano, Senior Vice President and Environmental Division Manager at Pare Corporation, is one of RISEP's founding members. RISEP is an association of environmental, industrial, and engineering firms organized to promote the advancement of environmental and engineering practitioners, and to provide a forum for networking and discussion of regulatory and technical issues that are facing the environmental business community in Rhode Island.

George Palmisciano, a Founding Member of RISEP and Senior VP at Pare

George is proud to have been a member for 25 years. George recalls the first RISEP meeting, "I remember the feeling of accomplishment and excitement at the end of our meeting, realizing that I was going to be a part of a really good thing. We definitely were in need of a group where environmental professionals could meet to share their experiences and tribulations and discuss our industry in a constructive manner. There was no other forum available at that time for sharing information and the group allowed us to get a heck of a lot done."
